Description:

"super sexy" "a lovely teasing lesbian seduction"

Two sharp knocks and then Alice heard the smooth and confident voice of a woman: "Come in!"

At some level, she had known that Laura would choose a woman for this assignment. Even so, she was slightly taken aback. And slightly taken aback, too, by her own sense of delight.

Standing at the window of a large white office was a tall woman with a narrow waist highlighted by the belt of her short, silk, dark blue dressing gown. The woman's hair was long, slightly curled, very full and jet black. She was looking out at rectangular jewels of the New York skyline, apparently uncurious about the new arrival. Alice's eyes moved down to the woman's long muscled legs which tapered delightfully into dark blue high heels, and she felt a thud of excitement in her stomach. Mmmm, she thought to herself, this woman has a beautiful figure!

The air was filled with the scent of lemons and Alice recognised the piano music of Chopin. Still nervous and feeling awkward that the masseuse had not even looked at her, Alice offered: "Hello?"

"Hello, dear," the mysterious woman replied, still staring out at the skyline. "Would you like a drink?"

"Yes, that would be lovely, thanks!"

Finally, the woman turned away from the window and Alice saw that her face was intensely beautiful, with large slightly imperious eyes that made her look like a princess. The woman looked Middle Eastern or maybe Greek, but her accent was pure New York. She must have been around 28 years old. "Hi", she said, "my name is Melantha, and you must be Alice!"

"Melantha," Alice said. "What a pretty name!"

"Why, thank-you!" (a gorgeous, confident, broad smile). "It means 'dark flower' in Greek!"

"Oh, wow, er, does it?" Alice stumbled a little.

"Yes, it does," the therapist added. "It does! It most certainly does!"

Alice touched her hair and gave a nervous half-smile. "I see," she said eventually. "So how... er, how does this work exactly?"

"You don't need to be nervous, dear!" said the therapist. "What would you like to drink? Juice, water, wine?"

"Er, I think wine. I'm a little nervous!"

Melantha moved to open a bottle of red wine and quickly poured two glasses.

"Well, like I say," Melantha replied eventually, "you don't need to be."

"You're having one too, a wine I mean?" said Alice.

"Yes, of course," Melantha replied as she brushed her own long dark locks away from those amazing dark brown eyes. "You can't really have a party for one, can you?"

"No, I guess not."

Alice still felt awkward.

"So you're a friend of Laura's?"

"Yes, I am. She's lovely, isn't she?"

"Indeed, she is. She is an amazing woman, and perhaps you do not yet realise quite how amazing she is!"

Alice was intrigued, but did not feel inclined to enquire further.

Melantha handed Alice a glass and Alice took a large sip - more of a gulp really! - to calm her nerves.

"So how should I get ready?" she asked.

"Well, you would probably be more comfortable without your jacket, I imagine" Melantha suggested, "and your blouse, and your skirt..."

"I see," said Alice, swallowing hard and hoping that she was not blushing visibly.

Of course, she had known she would not be able to keep all her clothes on for a massage, but it was still a little scary to be asked to remove them - especially when the request came from someone as outrageously beautiful (and alluringly confident) as this mysterious woman.

"Is it OK if I call you Melantha?" Alice asked tentatively, somehow feeling this name was a little too informal for a woman with such a regal bearing.

"Well, that is my name, dear!" said the Greek woman.

Alice blushed again: "Yes of course!"

"Er, your jacket?" the woman said firmly.

"Yes, sorry!"

"You don't need to apologise, dear!"

"Yes, sorry about that!"

Melantha raised an eyebrow at this second apology, and they both laughed.

"The jacket?"
