Description:

'Revolutions, Wars, Partitions, Social unrest, Ethnic cleansing; call it what you may.

For every dog has his day, and for every satisfied dog, the adverse consequences to innocent people in-between can be truly catastrophic.

The Revolution in Egypt in 1952 was no exception.

Who can argue with a people who want to rule themselves?

But what about those who suffered the consequences - the displaced persons; the refugees?

For each person forcibly displaced has a story to tell, and this is such a story.

The story of a Swiss/Italian family that had settled, for diametrically opposed reasons, in the cosmopolitan country of Egypt since the 1870s.

A family that had worked hard and that had consequently got wealthy.

It was not a political family, nor had it anything to do with the revolution or with the Suez Crisis that followed.

But the effect was that it, along with countless other families, suddenly found itself dispossessed, homeless, and in a refugee camp in England.

Some would see that dramatic change in circumstances as nothing short of a disaster.

But others might well interpret that very same chain of events as a God-given opportunity to start a brand new life; to forge a new and a hopefully better future, both for themselves and for generations to come.

From privilege to poverty, and the climb back.'
